Excerpt: . guished in every benevolent public work and movement of the day. It is not intended at this time to follow him in these various labors, a recital of which would fill a large volume. It may be enough to say that he was truly a Christian philanthropist; most unostentatiously laboring, by personal influence, by correspondence, and by aid of the public press, for the promotion of any cause of humanity he was engaged in, or for the suppression of iniquity and wrong. He published several tracts and pamphlets on the evils of intemperance. The subject of war, with all its attendant horrors, was brought closely home to him by the trials of the American Revolution. The sufferings of the soldiers, and of the inhabitants on whom they were quartered, formed the object of many a visit to the officers camp or to the...
