Eaphael s fame as an architect is obscured by his renown as a painter. His genius was acknowledged in the cartoons and frescos of the Vatican, but feebly asserted in the building of St. Peter s. The labour which he gave to the first was much more fruitful of results than that which he spent on the second. The slow progress which he made in rearing the basilica may be judged from a background in the fresco of the Coronation of Charlemagne, where the square of the dome is depicted, with the high altar protected from the weather by hangings and a papal throne screened with arras from the wind. The temporary character of the arrangement is shown...
