Excerpt: . the Emperor was no less his benefactor than yours: retire, Caroline. And she turned her back on her. It was not till after the Emperor s death that Madame Laetitia became reconciled to her daughter. In 1820, when a Bonapartist conspiracy was denounced to the Chambers of Paris; when Spain rpse, through the courage of the illustrious and unfortunate Kiego; when Naples revolted, and all Italy was covered by Carbonari--the government of the Bourbons felt great alarm. Deceived by false information, it appealed to the Pope against the behaviour of Madame Laetitia, who was then residing at Eome. She had, it was stated, her agents in Corsica to foment there an insurrection in favour of Napoleon, that its ramifications extended into the interior of France, to gain partisans for her son, and that the king was aware of DUKE DB BLACAS. 149 the number of millions Madame Laetitia employed for all this. In the eyes of any man of common sense these stupid accusations fell of themselves, and it was more than absurd to suspect a woman of Madame Mere s age, who was close upon eighty, who never left her home or received a stranger, and was only visited at intervals by those of her family who resided in Rome, and daily by her brother, the Cardinal. It was really atrocious to impute such designs to the Emperor s mother, and point her out as the first mover in a conspiracy, but the...
